NEW YORK by Cibo

Martin Cibik

Photography, Video, VR

The NY piece is based on the artist's February trip to New York. During the trip, he collected a vast amount of digital material, including photographs, videos, 3D scans, audio recordings, 360-degree pictures and videos, and 180-degree 3D pictures and videos, totalling over 46GB. In addition to this, Cibo also incorporated a few 3D models downloaded from the internet.

This piece is only a small part of a larger project that the author has planned and was supported using public funding by Arts Council England. At this stage, it consists of two still images (one from day and one from night), in a 360-degree/3D format for virtual reality. In the future, sound and video will be incorporated into this spatial digital experience.

The NY piece is a visual representation of the places and objects that the artist encountered during the trip. Cibo used the visual condensation technique to capture the essence of the experience and highlight its most memorable moments. This approach reflects the current trend of making complex human experiences more accessible (less subjective) and instant without the need for physical engagement.

Artist Bio

Martin is a Leicester-based artist who studied Fashion Design and Fine Art. He is lately predominantly working in the digital medium. He exhibited and participated in numerous exhibitions, creative projects and workshops.

His work is based on the exploration of reality and its relationships. It incorporates the element of merging. Either between physical and digital realities or between spiritual and technological aspects. The prospect of technological singularity is echoing throughout his scenes.
